

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has improved our time at home by allowing our family to share in meals together without the constant interruption of phone solicitation. That time is too precious for bonding and upbuilding of our children and each other to give away to phone solicitors. The Indiana statutes in my opinion are not strong enough. I used to receive 12 calls per week, now I only receive one. That is still too many.
